the legislature intends the statute to reach property to the maximum extent possible"), and read in light of the entire statutory scheme. As I read the amendments to the Code, the repeal of the provision with respect to transactions in interstate commerce was simply intended to leave intact certain provisions concerning actions affecting a debtor's transfer of personal property. Chondrogenic differentiation is a very complex, multistep process that follows the sequential expression of a variety of transcription factors, in a well-controlled and spatiotemporally organized manner. At the center of this process is the articular chondrocyte, the only cell in the adult that can undergo chondrogenesis. To date, the articular chondrocyte is the only cell type that can be effectively expanded in vitro and distinguished from other cells through a combination of unique gene expression and ECM composition. Following these lines of evidence, we propose a strategy to instruct articular chondrocytes to commit to a particular differentiation state. This reprogramming process can be used to synthesize a variety of neo-chondrogenic tissue-like materials from the expanded chondrocytes, thus eliminating the need for patient-specific chondrocyte implantation and open surgery and reducing the risk of implant rejection, as well as shortening the tissue generation time by at least an order of magnitude. Here we describe the basic principle of this approach and its clinical translation. Influence of electro-deposited nano-scale HA coating on the wear resistance of cobalt-chromium alloy. Five identical horizontal stainless steel discs were used and were subjected to weight-driven experiments against M4 Co-Cr alloy. Then, on the worn surfaces, the surface topography was examined and wear debris on the opposite face was collected for analysis. The three surfaces were polished and electro-deposited with a sodium calcium aluminosilicate (SAS) slurry. The electro-deposition
